

1. Charter Schools Outperform District Schools: The data clearly indicates that Charter schools have a significantly higher overall passing rate compared to District schools. This striking difference underscores the superior performance of Charter schools in educational outcomes. While several factors may contribute to this contrast, one crucial factor may be linked to our next observation.
2. School Size Matters: Larger schools, specifically those with 2000-5000 students, exhibit a notably lower overall passing rate compared to smaller and medium-sized schools. Larger schools have an overall passing rate of only 59.29%, in contrast to the approximately 90% passing rate at smaller and medium-sized institutions. This finding may help explain the superior performance of Charter schools, as they tend to be smaller on average compared to District schools. The smaller instructor-to-student ratio in Charter schools potentially fosters a more personalized and effective educational environment, contributing to their higher success rates.
